The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claims 1-3 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Wenzel DE 19758346. Wenzel discloses a guide rail as claimed, including connecting element (8a) and tension element (7'). With respect to claim 2, the tension element (7') can press the mutually confronting end faces against one another. With respect to claim 3, the tension element (7') can be actuated from a top side. It is noted that a recitation of the intended use of the claimed invention must result in a structural difference between the claimed invention and the prior art in order to patentably distinguish the claimed invention from the prior art. If the prior art structure is capable of performing the intended use, then it meets the claim.

Claims 1-3 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Walker US 804,989. Walker discloses a guide rail of a linear guide including a tension element (13-15). With respect to claim 2, the tension element (13-15) can press the mutually confronting end faces against one another. With respect to claim 3, the tension element (13-15) can be actuated from a top side. It is noted that a recitation of the intended use of the claimed invention must result in a structural difference between the claimed invention and the prior art in order to patentably distinguish the claimed invention from the prior art. If the prior art structure is capable of performing the intended use, then it meets the claim.

Claims 1-3 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Brinson et al. US 6,557,775. Brinson discloses a guide rail as claimed, including a tension element (44). With respect to claim 2, the tension element (44) can press the mutually confronting end faces against one another. With respect to claim 3, the tension element (44) can be actuated from a top side. It is noted that a recitation of the intended use of the claimed invention must result in a structural difference between the claimed invention and the prior art in order to patentably distinguish the claimed invention from the prior art. If the prior art structure is capable of performing the intended use, then it meets the claim.

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 5-7 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Wenzel, Walker, and Brinson et al., individually, as applied to claims 1-3 above. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to utilize the rail connections taught by the prior art in other known rail guides, including those having running tracks formed by running wires, ball rolling grooves and planar running surfaces for endless rotating rolling elements, as these types of guide rail systems are notoriously old and well known in the art.

Claims 4, 8, and 9 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.

As allowable subject matter has been indicated, applicant's reply must either comply with all formal requirements or specifically traverse each requirement not complied with. See 37 CFR 1.111(b) and MPEP § 707.07(a).
